INTRODUCTION AND OBJECTIVES

Planning Abroad is an elective course for the MURP degree program in the School of Urban and Regional Planning; it is also open to students from other graduate programs at FAU. In Spring 2017, the course is focused on the topic of Vancouverism and EcoDensity and includes travel abroad to Vancouver, British Columbia, to complete field work, and to apply that field work to a local planning situation in downtown West Palm Beach upon returning to the United States. Please see separate document on expected travel costs.

General Background

The School of Urban and Regional Planning has conducted Planning Abroad experiences since spring 2003 (see: <http://www.fau.edu/surp/programs/planning-abroad.php>). SURP faculty and students have visited cities, governments, and universities in Austria, Brazil, Chile, France, Germany, Italy, the Netherlands, Spain, and Turkey. These experiences have been carried out as general or topical study tours or as exchange programs with other universities. Some of these experiences have resulted in student/faculty publication or presentation of papers at academic and/or professional conferences.

General Objectives

The general objective of SURP's Planning Abroad course (and experience) is to allow the opportunity for students to participate in a topical course that also includes travel abroad, learning how urban planning is accomplished elsewhere in the world. Upon returning to the United States, the students will apply these international concepts to a local urban planning situation. Thus, the course combines regular academic coursework and experiences within a different environment. The course, as an elective, addresses the "elective" component of the MURP program, and also the Planning Accreditation Board curriculum criteria that stress the need to understand global perspectives but also those that relate to involvement with a variety of stakeholders.

APPROACH

In Spring 2017, Planning Abroad is on the topic Vancouverism and EcoDensity. "Vancouverism" is an internationally known term that describes a new kind of city living. Vancouverism combines deep respect for nature with enthusiasm for busy, engaging, active streets and dynamic urban life. Vancouverism means tall slim towers for density, widely separated by low-rise buildings, for light, air, and views. It means many parks, walkable streets, and public spaces, combined with an emphasis on sustainable forms of transit. In 2006, Vancouver Mayor Sam Sullivan introduced the term “EcoDensity.” EcoDensity started with a challenging, but healthy, city-wide public dialogue about strategic, green densification across every neighborhood. EcoDensity has transformed planning and design in Vancouver around smart, strategic densification (i.e., along transit, in centres, and along corridors). No wonder city planners and urban designers come to Vancouver from around the world to find inspiration for re-imagining their inner cities, and look for more sustainable ways to live healthy and sociable lives. However, we will also explore one of the poorest areas of Vancouver—Hastings Crossing Business Improvement Area (BIA)—to learn how world-class cities need to also address social and economic challenges.

The course includes both regular academic work learning about the applicable planning topics and getting ready for travel abroad and within our community, and field work both in Vancouver and West Palm Beach. The classroom work and field work is followed by academic reflection and the preparation of a group project report and an individual paper.

The approach and deliverables include five elements: (1) to become familiar with the concepts and ideas of Vancouverism and EcoDensity through the initial readings and classroom work, (2) to prepare a template for the field work in Vancouver using these concepts, (3) to conduct field work in both Vancouver and West Palm Beach, (4) to work on a group project (and deliver a PowerPoint Presentation to the class) applying the lessons learned from the Vancouver field work to downtown West Palm Beach, and (5) to prepare a final paper reflecting upon what you learned in this course.
